

1.If we are to sustain ourselves as Land-grant institutions how are we to meet the needs and demands of a global society?

2.What are your thoughts as to Land grant institutions attempts to build harmonious relationships with communities whereas the goals of the institutions meet the needs of the communities?

3.The Smith-Lever Act created the Cooperative Extension Services who were to serve as the portal for communities to engage and collaborate with the institutions, staff, and students. Today, many of these institutions do not work closely with the communities and have not built close relationships with extension. Talk about how this "mission drift" can be changed and what it would take to do so.

4.How do you feel about institutions starting with HBCU's as a step to change this mission drift?

- A. We have lost the spirit of change
- B. We have to be a part of change
- C. Curiosity of change should be led by faculty
- D. Faculty need to understand how the world has changed
- E. We need to recruit people who understand the meaning of land grant institutional(turn the ivory tower into a helping hand
- F. Students are being trained for jobs that will not be in existence
- G. Create a culture of fierce land grantness(be about purpose and character of faculty and character of faculty and the university).
- H. Be risk takers
